The Press in Great Britain

In Britain newspapers differ greatly from each other in the type of news they report and the way they report it.

On the one hand, there are "quality" newspapers: The Times, The Financial Times, The Daily Telegraph. These papers report major national and international news stories, the world of politics and business, the arts and sport.

On the other hand, there are "populars" or "tabloids", so called because of their small size. Popular papers (The Daily Express, The Sun, The Daily Star) pay much attention to sensational news, extraordinary events, catastrophes, accidents, private lives of aristocracy, of people of art, of music and movie¹ stars.

Popular papers use many photographs and cartoons². It is often said that the popular press entertains³ its readers, but not informs them. The tabloid press is far more popular than the quality press.

In addition to 12 national daily newspapers there are 9 national papers which are published on Sundays. Most of the Sundays papers contain more reading material than the daily papers. Reading a Sunday paper, like having a big Sunday lunch, is an important tradition in many British families.

Nearly every area⁴ in Britain has one or more local⁵ newspapers. Local newspapers report local news and advertise local business and events.

The offices of most papers are situated in Fleet Street in the City of London, which is the centre of British journalism. British papers are bought and read not only in the United Kingdom, but also in many other countries.
